Hi Michele,

This looks fine. I'll send to Ken for his comments. He's back on Friday, so we may not hear back from him until then.

Thanks,
Leslie

Hi Leslie,

This morning I had a conversation with a representative of the State Water Resources Control Board (John Borkovich) to get a better understanding of the USGS study and its findings. David and I agreed yesterday that I should do this in order to figure out how to best respond to this part of the congressional letter.

This is what I learned: The study and results were presented to the state board verbally at a meeting in Sacramento in February 2019. The study results, to paraphrase the state board representative, were inconclusive, whereas the newspaper articles reporting the study results overstated the findings – specifically that they reported that the study confirmed an impact of oil production related activities on the quality of shallow ground water in Kern, Ventura and Santa Barbara Counties. John guesses the results will be finalized in writing by early next year, at the earliest. There is a great deal of interest in the study. USGS has not shared the results with EPA. They conducted the study under an agreement with the State Water Board – to perform regional groundwater monitoring prior.

For this reason I did not specifically include a response to this portion of the congressional letter. But if desired, a few sentences could be added, such as:

The USGS study was requested by the California State Water Resources Control Board. The results of the study are preliminary and were presented to the Water Board during a meeting in February 2019. We understand the final report will be published sometime early next year.

See attached incoming from Rep. Carbajal and Sen. Feinstein on the proposed Cat Canyon exemption. We'll need to draft a response for the RA; probably due in 2 weeks. Michele, could you take an initial crack? Let me know if you would like to discuss today. Thanks, David

All –

Please see attached incoming joint letter from Sen. Feinstein and Rep. Carbajal regarding the aquifer exemption for Cat Canyon Oil Field. I will enter the incoming letter in our Correspondence Management System and prepare a Congressional yellow folder and drop off in Water Division for them to begin drafting a response to the letter for signature by RA Mike Stoker.
